Art Unit: 1763

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negatived by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-8 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Obara (JP 8-107076) taken in view of Nakane (JP 58-40837) and Mears (5,040,484). Obara discloses a substrate support for use in a coating apparatus including a stage and a shaft member for angularly displacing the stage bearing the substrate from a substrate receiving position to a vertical position, and a plurality of support members protruding from the substrate bearing surface, for supporting the edge of the substrate when the stage is in the vertical position. Obara does not disclose moving means for the support members. Nakane and Mears each disclose an apparatus for clamping a semiconductor wafer securely to a wafer support, wherein the clamping means comprises protruding support members to clamp the wafer securely. Nakane teaches the step of providing the protruding clamping support members such that they protrude from the substrate bearing surface. Mears teaches (Fig. 2) that protruding clamping support members can securely hold a wafer as it is rotated by a shaft from a horizontal position to a vertical position. It would have been obvious to one skilled in the art to provide the substrate support surface of Obara with clamping support members as illustrated by Nakane because Nakane and Mears teach that clamping support members can securely hold a wafer to the surface of a substrate bearing surface.
